

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF FORENSIC STUDIES (AIAFS) presents

The Neuroscience and Management of Confabulation in Psycholegal Settings

Presenters: Jerrod Brown, Ph.D. and Jennifer Sweeton, Psy.D. M.S., M.A

Date: Friday, May 14, 2021 Time: 9:00 am - 12:00 pm (CST) 3.0 CEUs

Training Description

Confabulation, wherein an individual unintentionally fabricates a memory, is a complex phenomenon with multiple definitions and uncertain etiology. When confabulation is present within criminal justice, forensic mental health, and legal settings, it can have disastrous consequences. As such, it is imperative for professionals who work within these settings to increase their awareness and understanding of this topic. This training is intended for professionals employed within psycholegal settings and other related fields who want to learn how neuroscience research can provide a better understanding of confabulation and its associated features. Participants can also expect to learn how this research can be used to guide and inform clinical and forensic practice (e.g., screening, treatment, communication strategies, and intervention). Empirically-based research findings and case study examples will be highlighted throughout this training.

Training Objectives

1. Explore the etiology of confabulation
2. Describe at least three of the proposed neural correlates of confabulation
3. Name at least two of the core features and clinical signs and symptoms of confabulation
4. Examine common medical, mental health, and neurological comorbidities associated with confabulation
5. Explore the implications confabulation has in psycholegal settings
6. State three proposed neurobiological underpinnings of confabulation
7. Describe how neuroscience research can provide a better understanding of confabulation and inform screening, intervention, and treatment
