Motivational Interviewing (MI) with Neurobehavioral and Neurocognitive Deficits

Presenters: Ernest Marshall, LCSW, and Leslie Barfknecht, LCSW

Date: Friday, August 16, 2019

Time: 8:30am - 4:00pm

6.0 CEUs

Training Description

Persons who present with neurobehavioral and/or neurocognitive deficits have complications with awareness, motivations, decisions, memory, impulsivity, and /or interpersonal relationship abilities. This training will explore how to adapt MI skills, techniques and the Spirit of MI with each of these individual differences, specifically reviewing case examples related to persons with traumatic brain injury (TBI), Intellectual Disability (ID), autism spectrum disorder (ASD), and fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD). Learn how to conceptualize strategies with these differing presentations to help guide persons through the rehabilitation and change process. Additionally, attendees will participate in exercises to increase self-awareness in order to recognize situations where it may be challenging to adhere to the Spirit of MI.

It is presumed attendees will have previous experience in Motivational Interviewing and is not an introduction to MI. This course will offer a brief review of MI and provide the attendee with specific MI adherent strategies in multiple contexts as described above. Attendees will be asked to participate in several experiential opportunities to practice applicable, take away skills to implement in their work.

Training Objectives

1. Review of Motivational Interviewing skills, techniques, processes and the Spirit.
2. Provide a brief overview of the latest research related to MI effectiveness.
3. Learn an increased understanding and awareness of differing presentations when working with neurobehavioral and neurocognitive deficits in client populations and how to recognize these and individualize MI application.
4. Increase ability to adapt MI strategies to differing presentations (TBI, ID, ASD, and FASD) through case examples and audience participation.
5. Increase self-awareness and ability to manage countertransference.

Presenter Biographies

Ernie Marshall, LCSW, has worked in the non-profit and public sectors in both clinical and administrative roles since 1996. His work has focused on populations traditionally considered resistant and hard to treat including: criminal justice, substance abuse, sexual offenders and multiply diagnosed individuals.
